Introduction

Creativity is as important now in education as literacy, and we should treat it with the same status. Drama has an immense role in the development of personality development.

Creativity, expression, confidence, communication, teamwork and language are the key skills developed in a person who practices theatrical forms. Regular access to the drama class also develops capacities such as empathy and understanding, emotional and social regulation, critical thinking and higher order abstraction skills.

Vision

Providing high engagement levels and active on-your-feet learning experiences are some other additional skills developed with drama.

Mission

When acting becomes a part of curriculum enrichment, the process of skill development will go in parallel with regular education
